University Rule R6-401A: Recognized Student Organization Classification. Revision 0. Effective Date – May 8, 2018

I. Purpose and Scope

A. Purpose: This University Rule has been developed to explain the University’s recognition process and to clearly establish, define, and formalize the relationship shared between recognized student organizations and the University of Utah.

Student Leadership & Involvement (SLI) exists, in part, to help students succeed and to support individual growth and development. Through involvement in one of the variety of recognized student organizations, students have the opportunity to enjoy meaningful relationships with others, learn about themselves, and develop lifelong skills. Additionally, recognized student organizations have the capacity to make a meaningful difference and significantly impact the University of Utah and the University community.

A few recognized student organizations are directly connected with a University department or unit and are so closely aligned with the mission and culture of the University that their actions will be considered the actions of the University. This will have legal, risk and other implications for the University. These sponsored student organizations receive more benefits from the University but also require more oversight and direction by University departments. At the opposite end of the spectrum, some recognized student organizations have virtually no connection with the University other than the fact that the membership is comprised, at least in part, of current students of the University. Most recognized student organizations fall somewhere between these two extremes.

With this as the context, under this Rule, recognized student organizations are to be categorized into one of three distinct categories with associated responsibilities and benefits. The three categories include: (a) sponsored, (b) affiliated, and (c) registered. The following conceptualization and description more clearly defines the relationship the University of Utah has with various types of recognized student organizations.

In addition to the recognized student organizations, students may form together and seek no affiliation with the University. These groups are not recognized student organizations; they are considered “non-registered” groups and receive no benefits or recognition from the University.

B. Scope: This Rule applies to all students of the University and all organizations formed by University students.

II. Definitions

A. Definitions provided in University Policy 6-401 apply for purposes of this Rule.

B. “SLI” shall mean the Student Leadership & Involvement.
